Sample: begin with the story, not the formula

Salvation is often compressed into a few sentences. Short summaries can be useful, but they can also hide the shape of the biblical story. Scripture begins with creation, dignity and calling before it speaks of rupture, guilt and alienation.

That starting point matters. Christianity does not begin by saying human beings are worthless. It begins with people made in the image of God and entrusted with a vocation. The tragedy of sin is therefore not that meaningless creatures broke an arbitrary rule, but that relationship, trust and calling were distorted.

When the New Testament speaks about grace, reconciliation and new life, those words belong to this larger story. Salvation is not merely escape from punishment; it includes restored relationship, transformed allegiance and a renewed way of life.

The full study follows that movement carefully and keeps the central claim clear: grace is received, not purchased. No book, payment or automated service can confer or certify salvation.

Preview boundary: this excerpt is intentionally short. The full ebook develops the subject through complete chapters, examples, exercises and reference material.
